Administrative History

The Associated Colleges of Upper New York were established in response to the needs of veterans returning from WWII and eligible for government education benefits. The colleges were constituted as quasi-public institutions intended for temporary existence. They were duly closed in the early 1950s. Closure dates for the campuses as recorded are as follows: Champlain College (1953), Middletown Collegiate Center (1950), Mohawk College (1948), and Sampson College (1949).

Scope and Content Note

Records include student transcripts and related records such as student files, correspondence, course catalogs, policies, and copies of high school transcripts compiled by closed two-year and four-year degree-granting colleges and universities chartered by the Office of College and University Evaluation, acting as the Regents' administrative arm. Institutions include private, as well as a few public colleges and universities; religious seminaries; and proprietary technical and business colleges.

B2417-17 This accretion consists of microfilm copies of student transcripts.
